Closing- Female Population Patterns

Steve Karr, discussed the female prison population growth over the last twenty years. The female population low occurred during the first observation (or 1994) and peaked in November 2000 at 2,976 inmates. Thereafter the female population began to decline and then began to fluctuate between FY01 and FY10. The FY10 female population was approaching the record-high, but currently there is a slight decline. Most of the female population growth had been attributed to drug admissions culminating in as much as 42% of the female prison population being drug offenders. However, that percentage is down to 28% indicating that female offenders are now being incarcerated for more serious crimes.

Steve Karr also deliberated on the female adult population by drug offense type the last two years month-by-month. The data gathered shows limited change with the range being 2,795 on the low end and 2,951 on the high end. Further, the percentage of female drug offenders within the population of the last two years has had limited fluctuation between 27.9% to 29.0%. The data show that the Department must monitor the female prison population closely; but there has been little change during the last years, and still has not exceeded the record high more than twelve years ago.
